Aging at Home: For a Lucky Few, a Wish Come True

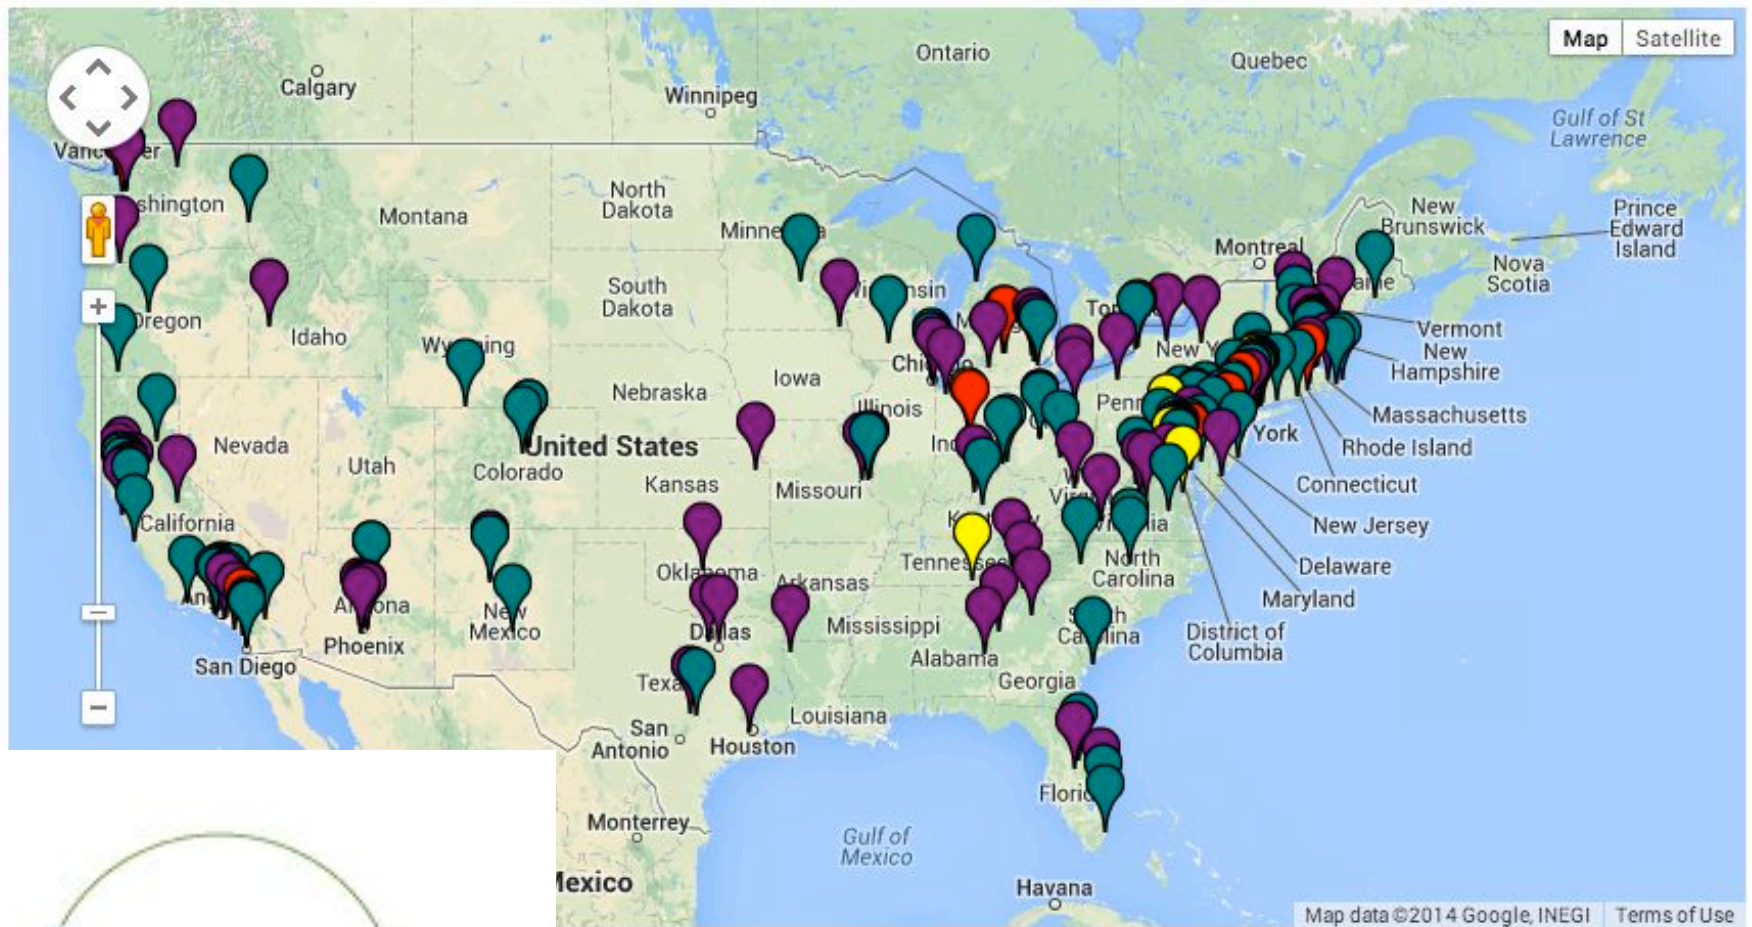

James Estrin/The New York Times

Residents of Beacon Hill in Boston, 52 to 98, grow old at home with support from a community group. Above, a personal trainer, Ian Burgess, coaches David B. Arnold Jr., 83.

“As the longevity revolution unfolds, senior villages will become one of the distinctive social inventions of our time... These virtual villages offer an affordable way for seniors to find the practical support, companionship, and cultural vitality they need while remaining in their own homes and neighborhoods.”
